WAS ATTACKED BY A SWORDFISH

VIEW OF THE HARBOR OF PAPEETE, TAHITI, SHOWING THE ENTRANCE WHERE LA BELLE FRANCE HAD AN EXCITING ENCOUNTER WITH A MONSTER SWORDFISH.

Captain Dabel of the schooner Aloha, now in port, brings an interesting story of a sensational encounter between the French schooner La Belle France and a gigantic xiphoid or monster swordfish. The occurrence took place near the entrance of the harbor of Papeete, the capital of the French colony of Tahiti. La Belle France was beating into Papeete harbor against a heavy wind and tide, having been on a voyage to one of the other islands of the group for coconuts and copra, to be shipped to San Francisco on the Oceanic liner Mariposa. The entrance to the harbor is narrow, running between two dangerous reefs. Just as the schooner was off the mouth of the channel there was a grinding crash that almost threw those on deck off their feet. The first thought of Captain Dobre was that La Belle France had struck and orders were given to lower a boat, while a signal of distress was made.

No sooner had these orders been given than the vessel began to move through the water as if propelled by some unseen force. This lasted but for a moment, however, and then the noise and motion ceased. It was thought that the schooner had struck an uncharted hummock of coral and slid off into deep water. But there was a big surprise waiting for the captain and crew. The mate started below to see whether any damage had been done to the ship, and descending the companionway ladder in the dark he suddenly stepped off into water above his knees. Stumbling around in the blackness of the hold, he fell upon something sharp. Yelling to the captain for a light, he held on to the object and when a lantern was brought it was discovered to be a sharp ivory blade protruding from the bottom of the schooner.

Signals of distress were made and a tug got La Belle France into the government drydock before she went down. When the water had been pumped out the sword of a monster swordfish was discovered sticking into the bottom of the schooner, amidships and about two feet to port of the keel. The sword had evidently broken off at the snout of the fish, as shreds of flesh were still attached to it. What was most wonderful was the penetrating power of the sword. It had gone through a two-inch plank covered with copper, a two-inch false bottom, an inch floor planking and two inch boards which were lying on the deck where the sword penetrated. The shock of the impact must have been terrific for the fish and probably was fatal, although the body was not washed ashore. Local savants who examined the sword were of the opinion that it belonged to a fish of larger size than anything yet recorded. They are often found to a length of fifteen feet, but the learned men of Tahiti are of the opinion that this one must have been at least twenty, if not twenty-five, feet long.

Many a woman is quite content to have her books, pictures and even her husband chosen for her, but when it comes to the selection of a gown, even such a one rises up and asserts herself. Lady Curzon is an example of just the opposite. Recipient of a veritable wonder gown—a present with the choosing of which she had naught to do, she has found double pleasure in it. It has satisfied her exacting fancy to the full, and has caused a stir in Indian London. It was sent to her by an Indian rajah and is composed of 15,000 wing cases of Indian beetles. They are sewn upon a silken robe, and lend a shimmering iridescence to the flowing folds of the garment. No wonder she describes it as a dream, for its coloring and texture is almost as elusive as the fabric that dreams are made of. Nearly every woman who has beheld the marvel has broken the commandment against covetousness, and though many have tried to duplicate it, their efforts have been in vain. Both because of the rarity of the wings and of the difficulty of affixing them, such a gown can only be fashioned by years of work.—New York Press.

TROUBLE OVER A
HONOLULU JAP

SAN FRANCISCO, May 22.—It may cost the Pacific Mail Steamship Company something for the treatment accorded U. Hara, a Japanese, by Chief Officer Andrew Dixon of the liner Mongolia. Hara has, in fact, according to some authorities, the best case that has developed for a long time, and he seems disposed to make the most of it.

When the Mongolia was at Honolulu a week ago a search of the steamer was made for Japanese stowaways, and seven out of the eight known to be aboard were routed out and transferred to the Coptic, bound back to the land of the chrysanthemum. The eighth man could not be found, although every nook and cranny of the big vessel was gone over. When the officers had finished the search, a Japanese was seen to jump overboard and strike out for the shore. The Mongolia was at that moment getting under way for the trip to this city. The Jap was immediately picked up by a skiff from a pilot boat and returned to the Mongolia. As the fellow landed on deck, drenched and shivering, Chief Officer Dixon, exasperated in consequence of the long search for the stowaway, and believing that this man was the fellow wanted, met him with a blow. The assault was witnessed by many of the passengers, who did not hesitate to voice their displeasure and make comments regarding the alleged brutality of the mate. The Japanese was then placed in irons and kept on deck for some time before being sent to a room and given dry clothing.

Some hours later, or when the Mongolia was far at sea, the real stowaway appeared, and the officers of the Mongolia realized that they had made a mistake. It developed then that the fellow taken from the water and put in irons was an innocent victim. He was a plantation hand, who had gone aboard the Mongolia to chat with his countrymen, and upon discovering that the vessel was under way, had jumped overboard with the intention of returning to shore. Coincident with this discovery, different treatment was meted out to Hara. He was provided with good clothing and released from confinement, and was permitted to pay his fare to this city, for he had decided en route to forsake Honolulu and look for employment here. He speaks English, and he confirmed the story of the assault by Mate Dixon.

Dixon denies having struck the man with his fist, declaring that he only slapped him to hurry him up as he came aboard and save further detention of the steamer. Dixon is upheld by some of the passengers, who say that the assault on the Japanese was not particularly severe. But the fellow thinks he has a pretty good case against the Pacific Mail Company for abduction, assault, humiliation and a few other things.

FAREWELL SERVICE.

On Sunday afternoon at 4:30 p. m. a farewell service was held on board the U. S. S. Bear by Mr. Everton, of the Seamen's Institute. Mr. P. H. Dodge delivered an address and Miss Potwine presided at the organ. After the service the visitors, among whom were several members of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, were entertained to tea by Captain Hamlet.

DIDN'T WANT ANY OLD AMERICAN FLAG

There was one very patriotic little Japanese girl at the celebration of the naval victory held Saturday afternoon at Aala Park. This celebration was a sort of aftermath to Friday night's big affair, but there were a couple of thousand Japanese assembled in the park yesterday afternoon to watch the athletic contest and day fireworks. In the middle of the program there was a fancy dance. This was where the little Japanese patriot shone. Six fair little daughters of Dai Nippon, of ages from ten to fourteen, and garbed in the gayest of gay kimonos, stood tortoise on the platform. Behind them a dozen more, similarly gowned, sat on the floor and produced music on various Japanese instruments.

Now it had been planned, out of courtesy to the country in which the celebration was taking place, that three of the six little dancers should carry miniature flags emblazoned with the Stars and Stripes, while the other three should bear the sunburst of Dai Nippon. It fell to the lot of our little patriot to bear the American flag. When it was placed in her hands she handed it back, saying, "No, I want a Japanese flag." Fancy a little American girl celebrating Dewey's victory in Tokio with a Japanese ensign instead of Old Glory! Long and loud were the little Japanese girl's protests, but after much expostulation from her father she gave in and, with just a faint suspicion of a tear in the corner of her eye, she danced and sang in honor of Tojo and the brave men of Japan with an American flag thrust in the folds of her kimono.

The dance of the children was very beautiful, being something between a dance and a darsart drill. Fans and dages were waved in unison and a song full of "Banzais" was sung, all to the accompaniment of the queer, half barbaric music. Besides this feature there were wrestling and single-stick exercises by the score and prizes were distributed liberally. In one of the enclosures a Japanese was pulling off wrestling matches between small boys of all nationalities. One little colored urchin held his own against all comers for some time and at last was challenged by a Japanese lad, who had one hand badly crushed and in bandages. The colored boy asked whether he should use one hand, but the Jap said, "You two, me one," and they went at it. The Japanese boy proved that he had enough jiu-jitsu in one hand to do the trick by throwing his opponent two out of three times. This brought out a mighty chorus of "Banzais." During the afternoon beautiful day fireworks were discharged, showing balloons, floating figures and flags.

In the suburbs of Baltimore there is an ancient glue factory that at times floods the surrounding scenery with an odor strange and far from sweet. A street railway line runs past the building, and one day last summer, when the place was indulging in a wild outburst of inglorious incense, an open car passed, in one of the seats of which sat an Irish laborer and a middle-aged lady. The Irishman's features expressed unutterable things and the lady sniffed diligently at a bottle of smelling salts. The car came to a stop, the glue rioted worse than ever, and the son of Erin could stand it no longer. "Excuse me, mum," he said, humbly, as he doffed his hat, "but might I ask ye to put the stopper in that there bottle?"

A good story is told concerning Emperor William's visit to Corfu. A party of English midshipmen were returning to their ships, after an excursion on foot to Achilleon, the Empress of Austria's palace. On arriving at the ferry, they found that the boat was too small to carry the whole party, and three or four of the midshipmen stripped and swam over, passing as they did so the

IMPROVEMENTS BEGIN AT LONG BRANCH

The transformation of old Long Branch, Waikiki beach, has begun with the razing of the livery buildings. The old bath houses fronting the beach proper will next be removed, and then the grounds will be laid out according to Mr. Young's plan to make them ready for such buildings as may be required to make it one of the most popular beach resorts. The original plans contemplate, among other things, the erection of shoot-the-chutes into the ocean. There will be a general improvement of the property to accord with the excellent laws and character of the Moana hotel property.

There is an eyecore between the Long Branch and Hawaiian Annex properties. This is the sluggish stream which is half the time blocked up by sand accumulations on the shore, causing it to become stagnant and to give off an offensive odor. When this water empties into the ocean bathers do not get the cleanest of baths when encountering the flow therefrom. The suggestion has been made to divert this stream from the rear of Ainalahu to the stream which passes through the culvert into the sea on the Diamond Head side of Queen Liliuokalani's.

IN MIZZOURA.

The well known American comedian, Nat C. Goodwin, made one of his biggest hits in "In Mizoura." The play deals with the quaint characters that are to be found around Bowling Green, Pike county, Missouri. There is a lot of good comedy and the story is worked out in Augustus Thomas's master manner. There is the kind-hearted sheriff, blacksmith, country helper, the mother and the shiftless hangers on. One of the principal scenes is the old blacksmith shop. In this scene a tire is put on the stage wheel in view of the audience. Miss Selwyn will give a new specialty and between the acts the moving picture, "The Hero of Liao Yang."

There will be a pink tea matinee given on Saturday afternoon and the ladies and gentlemen of the company will serve tea to those present, on the stage, immediately after the performance.

Seats for the last week of the Elleford season now on sale at the Orpheum box office.
